

Fund Commentary and Strategy

MYR Class A returned -4.90% outperforming the benchmark by 1.27%. Despite hawkish tone out of the December Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) that drove negative market performance and Bank of Japan (BoJ) yield curve control (YCC) tweak that fuels the fear, the strategy showed its resiliency through its approach towards the high quality characteristic names. By region, strong allocation to EU contributed positively as the EU market shows some resiliency from the valuation and macro perspective. Selection was positive in both North America and EU while being offset by Asia Pacific. By sector, strong selection in Healthcare and Information Technology was the primary driver for outperformance.

By individual stocks, the top contributors were Novo Nordisk and Becton Dickinson. Both are quality names that benefit from sector rotation for some defensiveness in the market. The greatest detractors were Alphabet and TSMC. We believe that the fundamentals for both these names remain structurally strong being the leader in respective space and market at some point in the future would appreciate more of such attractive valuation.

Impact Focus of the Month: Over the course of the year the team have been engaging with those companies in the portfolio that have not set, or committed to set, Science Based Target Initiative (SBTi) approved emissions targets. We were delighted to learn that our US Utility holding Eversource has committed to setting targets. Eversource was initially hesitant about committing to setting targets (due to difficulties associated with measuring its complex emissions profile) however through engaging with the company and connecting the company with CDP, Eversource were encouraged to hire consultants to assess the feasibility of setting targets and ultimately fully committed to doing so. We believe this is a great example of engagement for actual impact and we plan to work with both Eversource and other holdings to push them to commit to SBTi's and learn from Eversource's journey.
