Strategies Employed (1 August 2024 to 31 October 2024)

There were no significant changes to the strategies employed during the period under review.

Performance Review of the Target Fund (1 August 2024 to 31 October 2024)

In total, the call option strategies in place on the Fund contributed 26bps to performance in the early part of August. CDS index protection contributed a net 10bps – the contribution was initially larger than this but some of the initial gain was given back whilst the position was being exited. EM allocations were generally strong, with single digit positive contributions from Mexico, South Africa, Egypt and Bahrain. Convertible bonds also contributed 12bps. Financials holdings were strong across the board, contributing 57bps in total, with more than half of this total from the most subordinated AT1 Or "co co" holdings.

Financials exposures contributed approximately half of the Fund's overall performance in September. Mexico was the largest of the EM sovereign contributors, adding approximately 20bps. South Africa, Egypt, Bahrain and our Eastern European exposures were also in firmly positive territory. Convertibles also contributed an outsized 35bps. Amongst the biggest contributors were a number of Chinese domestically-focused names – the related equity prices took off from depressed valuations as the government announced stimulus measures. Call option structures on German Bunds also contributed a few basis points, whilst CDS-based hedging detracted just over 10bps.

In October, relatively strong employment data from the US pushed Fed rate cut expectations back and US Treasury yields higher, before a swing in the polls suggesting greater likelihood of a Trump win in the US Presidential election pushed them higher still. Meanwhile, higher taxes and spending plans from the UK government pushed UK gilt yields higher. As a result the duration exposure of the Fund proved negative of for the month, and returns were merely in line with global bond indices. Emerging markets also suffered over the month, giving back some recent returns.

Review of Market (1 August 2024 to 31 October 2024)

There was significant volatility in early August that faded quickly. Risk assets sold off and core sovereign bond yields moved lower following weaker US jobs data. Investors positioned for a faster pace of rate cuts by the Federal Reserve, whilst the Bank of Japan kept its relatively hawkish stance. The move was exacerbated by low trading volume, which is typical of the time of year. The scale of the move led to the unwinding of a number of speculative positions financed by borrowing the Japanese Yen. Credit spreads moved sharply wider, before recovering through the rest of the month to finish it largely unchanged. US Treasury yields retraced some of their move lower through the month, but still finished the month down.

A 50bp rate cut by the Federal Reserve in September set the tone for markets; US Treasury yields moved lower and steeper, dragging global government yields with them. The dollar was generally weaker against most peers. Spreads suffered as economic data cooled in the US and was very weak in Europe. Equity markets were initially weak, but rebounded into strongly positive territory, buoyed by the prospect of lower rates and, towards month end, a broad slew of supportive policy measures by the Chinese government and the PBoC.

In October, Equity markets sold off, dragging other risk markets with them, whilst US Treasury yields were extremely volatile; generally trending higher but with a significant move down. European government bond curves were similarly volatile but ultimately moved much less.
