Nomura Global Dynamic Bond Fund - Class MYR

September 2026

Fund Commentary and Strategy

During the month, the Fund was mainly invested in the Target Fund.

Commentary from the Target Fund Manager

Class MYR returned -0.65% in September primarily the result of underlying interest rate exposure. Our hedging strategy did as you would expect, softening the negative return over the month given we are short credit spreads which widened. The main detraction for the fund were holdings in AT1 Subordinated bank bonds and EM government bond exposure in Romania and Bulgaria – primarily due to their long duration. We used the outperformance of our hedges as an opportunity to take profits on those with a view to re-enter at more attractive levels.

The month was dominated by a global bond rout driven by ongoing energy-led inflation pressures and a synchronised turn to monetary tightening. Middle East supply disruption — the closed Strait of Hormuz, the shutdown of Saudi Arabia's East-West pipeline and Houthi attacks on Gulf infrastructure — carried Brent from the mid-$90s to above $100/bbl for most of the month, while European gas futures reached new highs relative to their 2022 peak. Crucially, the December 2027 Brent future also reached new highs, signalling investors are pricing a protracted, not transitory, shock with the associated impact to inflation expectations.

Central banks validated the hawkish repricing. The Fed delivered its first hike since 2023, to 3.75–4.00%, framed by Chair Warsh as removing "a dose of accommodation", with 16 of 18 dots signalling more to come. The ECB hiked to 2.50% warning inflation would stay "well above target for an extended period", the BoJ hiked to 1.25%, and the BoE held at 3.75% with an upside-skewed inflation assessment. By month-end markets priced ~73% odds of an October Fed hike and ~93bp of further tightening by mid-2027.

The result was a substantial move in yields, 10yr Treasuries closed at post-2007 highs above 5.20% and 30yr yields at post-2002 highs, a material repricing of the policy path. Bunds reached post-2009 highs, OATs post-2008, and the Franco-German spread widened to 127bp, the widest since 2012. Against the challenging macro backdrop, returns across fixed income were broadly negative with US Corps and Treasuries -2.73% and -2.38% respectively while South Africa fared somewhat better at -0.25% for their local bond index.

As we enter the fourth quarter, markets continue to grapple with the ramifications of sustained higher oil prices and the impact for future rate paths while geopolitics remains in focus, particularly in France where a clear path to fiscal consolidation will be needed to steady OAT – Bund spreads. The US Mid Term elections in November mean we can expect announcements or policies aimed at winning votes for the Republican party, so far these have been elusive but will likely become more pervasive.
