Nomura Global Multi-Theme Equity Fund - MYR Class

September 2026

Fund Commentary and Strategy

During the month, the Fund was mainly invested in the Target Fund.

Commentary from the Target Fund Manager

MYR Class returned +1.45% in September while the benchmark returned +0.26%, resulting in an outperformance of 119bps.

The U.S. equities firmed early in the month after a Federal Reserve Board governor signalled support for holding rates steady provided inflation pressure stayed contained. Sentiment turned by mid-month as the August PPI pointed to building price pressure, and although AI-led technology names lent intermittent support, a stronger than expected September composite PMI lifted Treasury yields late in the period and left valuations looking stretched. The market closed lower over the month.

In European equity markets, higher crude prices fed through to inflation expectations early in the month, reinforcing the case for further ECB tightening, while sovereign yields rose with France at the centre of renewed fiscal concern. Both weighed on equities. Optimism around diplomatic efforts to end the US and Iran conflict then drove a recovery, but with no clear path to a ceasefire emerging and oil moving higher again into month end, the market gave back those gains and finished down.

Stock selection was effective for the month, as positioning in Health Care, Financials, and Industrials contributed positively. The month's main trade was a switch within Industrials. We initiated a position in Quanta Services, a US construction and engineering name, believing the market underestimated the medium- to long-term growth in power infrastructure work driven by rising electricity demand and the need to upgrade transmission and distribution networks. On the other hand, we fully exited our position in Uber Technologies on a less compelling medium- to long-term growth outlook.

Top individual stock contributors during the quarter included overweight positions in cancer and prenatal genetic testing specialist Natera, enterprise HR and finance software provider Workday, cloud data warehousing company Snowflake, IT service management software maker ServiceNow, and AI accelerator chip designer NVIDIA. On the other hand, overweight positions in hard disk drive maker Western Digital, NAND flash memory and SSD maker SanDisk, semiconductor production equipment maker Applied Materials, and data centre power and cooling equipment maker Vertiv, alongside the non-holding of consumer electronics giant Apple, detracted from performance.

Portfolio rebalancing during the quarter involved increasing allocations to the Health Care, Financials, and Consumer Discretionary sectors. These changes were funded through reductions in Information Technology, Industrials, and Materials. From a thematic perspective, we increased exposure to AI/Data Science, Global Aging, Tech Solutions, and Established Brands, while primarily reducing New Technology and IoT/Reshoring.

Theme Spotlight

[Investment Theme: Established Brand]

One of the growth themes the fund focuses on is "Established Brand". The strength of companies with established brands lies in differentiating themselves from competitors through distinctive branding strategies, earning consumer loyalty and trust, and generating stable profits and growth over the long term. Within this group of firms with firmly established brands, the fund targets companies actively pursuing new consumer-facing services and product development using AI and other technologies, along with improvements in production efficiency, to reflect evolving consumer preferences.

[Featured Company: TJX]

TJX is one stock linked to the "Established Brand" theme. The company is an off-price retailer that sources excess inventory, off-season goods and clearance merchandise across apparel, footwear, accessories and home products at low cost, then sells to consumers at discounted prices. It operates more than 5,000 stores across North America, Europe and Oceania through store brands including TJ Maxx and Marshalls, and attracts support from a wide customer base by offering a treasure-hunt shopping experience where well-known brand goods can be bought at bargain prices. Backed by a global sourcing network and the merchandising expertise of its buyers, the company delivers a broad product assortment that underpins a strong retail brand, and medium to long term earnings growth is expected.
